PREFACE

This historic book is the most complete public inventory to date of human encounters with nonhuman technology fallen to earth. Future readers will understand what officials today do not admit: humankind is not the only marvelous mind in the Milky Way.

It is fascinating to seek the truth of this astonishing claim. It is also difficult. The phenomena themselves are rare, and often authorities ridicule the facts and impede research. In The Structure of Scientific Revolutions, Thomas Kuhn describes how “normal science often suppresses fundamental novelties,” and conventional research is often “a strenuous and devoted attempt to force nature into the conceptual boxes...”¹

How much more this must be true when new data—rarified but compelling evidence—violates not only academic dogma but also subverts political, economic and moral assumptions. If these anomalous data are true, the earth is not ours alone.

This is not a unique claim. After all, if most religious believers believe what they say, this is the message they profess. But very few take it seriously. Yet it may be easier to accept the spiritual intangibles, which culture accepts, than to acknowledge the surprising, unorthodox tangibles that culture rejects. While less than divine, perhaps other intelligent life has touched our planet.

How ridiculous! So say the keepers of convention. They give little time to uncomfortable facts and numerous case histories; they ignore or belittle the evidence.

Ryan Wood has paid close attention to the evidence. In partnership with his father, accomplished aerospace physicist Dr. Robert Wood, Ryan has worked with clarity and persistence to tell us what we must consider in the next phase of human development. For good or for ill, other minds in the galaxy have come to visit.

Will this change one’s route to work or lower one’s household bills? Not today. Yet what if possibilities in a wider community would realign power on earth? And beyond escapist speculation, what if this encounter with new technology and culture requires a new level of responsibility and human maturity? This might be difficult.

As you read Ryan Wood’s summary of cases where visitors have faltered to earth, allow yourself to draw your own conclusions. Ask yourself three questions:

- 1) Do you think human science and culture are the highest possible in the universe?
- 2) Do you think trillions of ancient stars—whose far planets are just now being found by science—can grow no civilization with the cleverness and desire to launch voyages of discovery, acquisition, enlightenment and sometimes error?

RYAN S. WOOD

3) Do you think governments tell all the truth all the time and allow such truths to loosen their grip on authority and undermine their assertions of reality?

You can hone your thoughts about these questions against the reports by competent persons of evidence that nonhuman craft have come to earth—some now in possession of institutions. Consider the motives of such institutions faced with the hints of vast technologies and the dilemma of uncertain intentions.

Ask yourself finally: What is next for our beautiful planet and the emerging human mind?

FOREWORD

“Do Flying Saucers come from Mars or Venus?”

This was the burning question in the 1950s, at least for those who were paying close attention to the “flaps” over spherical discs reported in the skies across America.

By the 1960s and 70s, we had become more sophisticated. The question became, “Do UFOs come from Alpha Centauri or Zeta Reticula 4?”

Now, early in the 21st century, we are even more sophisticated. The question has now become, “Do UFOs come from another galaxy or another dimension or even another time period?”

The answer to all of these questions appears to be “Yes”. Perhaps all of the above is true as well as some other sources we haven’t even imagined as yet.

Due to the government’s policy of denial and ridicule imposed on the American public since at least the time of World War II, few people and even fewer credible scientists have been willing to make a serious study of the ubiquitous UFOs.

In fact, for many years, many people, including this writer, gave serious consideration to the claim that UFOs did not exist at all, that they were simply hallucinations or perhaps some mass psychosis. Of course, if UFO sightings represented some heretofore undiagnosed and contagious mass psychosis, that certainly should have qualified as a big news story and the object of intense scientific scrutiny.

But this did not happen since, with the advent of the personal camcorder, hardly a day passes without someone somewhere in the world taking clear video of UFOs. And we all know that you cannot take a photograph or video of a hallucination.

Lt. Gen. Nathan F. Twining of the U. S. Air Material Command summed it all up as far back as September, 1947, when he wrote, “The phenomenon reported [UFOs] is something real and not something visionary or fictitious.”

Between 1947 and today, the list of official and credible sources speaking to the reality of UFOs has grown weighty. Astronomer Dr. J. Allen Hynek, one of the first scientists used as a government-sponsored debunker, came to understand that he was dealing with something out of this world. “Those who still hold that the entire subject of UFOs is nonsense will be sorely challenged if they have the courage to take an honest look...” he wrote.

Astronauts Gordon Cooper and Brian O’Leary have publicly told of UFO experiences, while Dr. Edgar Mitchell, the sixth man to walk on the moon, has even stated that some of our current technology has been gained from reverse-engineered extraterrestrial craft and artifacts.

Even presidents have weighed in on the subject. “One thing’s for sure,” stated President Jimmy Carter, who spoke openly about his own UFO experience, “I’ll never make fun of people who say they've seen unidentified flying objects in the sky.”

After decades of public conditioning through books, periodicals, movies and TV shows following the path of Star Trek and Star Wars, current national polls indicate that those who do not believe in life outside this Earth are significantly dwindling. Most polls indicate that more than 80 percent of the U.S. population now believes there is life outside our planet.

Most people, however, still hesitate to confront the UFO issue head on, largely due to the fact that the corporate mass media steadfastly refuses to present UFOs as a serious issue. And we all know that if the network and cable talking heads are not addressing a subject, it must not exist.

One person who has been talking about it for several years now is Ryan Wood. Ryan, along with his father Dr. Robert M. Wood, has done significant work in recent years by acquiring, analyzing and verifying the infamous Majestic 12 documents leaked to the public over a lengthy period of time. This collection of controversial secret government documents outlines the carefully constructed effort to not only seize and sequester grounded UFOs but also to deny their very existence while inciting ridicule against anyone who would claim otherwise.

With the publication of this work, Majic Eyes Only, Ryan has done a valuable service to all UFO researchers by cataloging and presenting the extraordinarily large number of reported UFO crashes and their retrievals.

Ryan himself admits that some, perhaps many, of these reports are thinly supported by the evidence. But if even half of the more than 74 cases addressed by Ryan Wood are genuine, this represents an incredible number of opportunities for the U.S. Government to possess, study and duplicate UFO technology.

UFO literature is rife with accounts of UFO experiences which point to secret government test craft. From the many sightings over Area 51 in Nevada to the well-documented Cash-Landrum case near Houston, Texas, in which a large floating globe was seen escorted by military helicopters, it seems clear that secret work on UFOs continues within hidden and secure government facilities.

Yet, secret government test craft does not explain all UFO reports, such as the 1897 crash of a large, silver cigar-shaped object in Aurora, Texas, a story well covered in the Dallas and Fort Worth newspapers. This craft was sighted over most of the western United States by thousands of citizens—and this was six years before the Wright brothers first flew at Kitty Hawk, NC.

It should be noted that none of America's most prestigious newspapers carried any notice of the Wright brothers' achievement for almost two years after the fact because their “experts” assured the editors that man could not fly.

Many questions remain in the UFO controversy. Scientists ask how interstellar pilots could survive a trip of hundreds of years while cutting-edge physicists offer speculation of deep space “worm holes” and the use of zero point energy.

Addressing the notion that the famous Roswell crash was precipitated by lightning, others argue that no species would build a spacecraft that would be susceptible to mere lightning bolts. On the other hand, some researchers can clearly see that unexpected energy such as a lightning storm might well disrupt a flight propulsion system based on electromagnetic energy, particularly if the craft came from a world that has no lightning.

Supporters of the Search for Extraterrestrial Intelligence (SETI) program claim that since their radio messages have not clearly been answered, there must be little or no life in the universe. Critics counter that any civilization advanced enough to develop interstellar space travel would be too advanced to notice crude radio signals which are almost obsolete in Earth technology. Still others ask whether any one of us could recognize, much less translate, Morse Code signals directed at our homes.

The universe is vast and humankind has barely cracked open the door on all of its wonders.

For now, we could not do any better than to study the following accounts of UFO crash retrievals and ponder what a reality that includes diverse intelligent life outside of our planet might mean for us and future generations.
